

The national identity of any country is a hard thing to define but in the UK, where immigration continues to be a divisive issue, there are ever more voices to hear.

If you ask people in the UK what they consider their national identity to be it is likely that you will get a different answer for every person you ask. A group of people may all say they are British, but they will also tell you that their family are from Scotland, England, or somewhere outside of the UK.

At Church Vale 'Being British' means that we all live here and have an interest in the United Kingdom. We are tolerant, respectful, inclusive and also interested in each other. We love to find out about the different people that make up our school community and wider community.

We will not judge people and will learn to make up our own minds about things.

Any comments that are made that we feel to be 'anti-British' will be challenged as will any hate incidents.

At Church Vale we will be vigilant of issues in the community and any speakers that we invite into school.
